

Why data matters in Supporting Families

With a growing population, it's vital for Local Authorities to utilise data to its full potential, ensuring vulnerable families and children are protected.

Supporting Families is building the resilience of vulnerable families, driving system change, and providing the right support at the right time.

The scale of the Supporting Families challenge

£22 Billion

£17 billion spent across public services due to late intervention. £6.4 billion by Councils. Plus the additional £5 billion of underspend per annum

620,000

Children in England living in a household with an adult that has experienced domestic violence, substance misuse or mental health issues

943,628

Cases of domestic violence and abuse, costing £5.2 billion per year

£1800

Up to £1800 additional funding per family, that most families struggle to claim.

Identifying those in need of support

In the re-development from Troubled Families to Supporting Families, the criteria for eligibility has changed, making finding those in need tricker than before. The Outcomes Framework have expanded from 6 to 10 this is to ensure a broad framework for supporting vulnerable people.

The burden of proof has also been expanded from 2 to 3 of the criteria now being met.

Up to £1,800 available for each family that an authority identify.

Data on people is now needing to be pulled from social care, education, police, housing, and health, and potentially wider. The capability to automatically produce a single view of a child/young person, household and family is critical in order to view them as a whole.

Why this is a challenge for Local Authorities

Disconnected systems and datasets internally & externally

• No ID's across records datasets, records are inconsistent (e.g. Tom, Thomas, Tommy)
